So things are coming along. As Robin Sloan puts it:

The appeal of not only genre but format—even a format as broad as “a blog post” or “a newsletter”—is that the production of More Stuff becomes “a thing you can do,” step by step. You determine the shape of your widget. You set up a little factory. It’s nice.

This week, I was digging my factory’s foundations. Possibly in a swamp.

My foundation has been set up and the factory has churned out its first few pages. Warning: these are all super rough and kind of look like shit on anything that isn’t a desktop. I’m still trying to get a handle around the structure of the thing overall and how to build a narrative across different pages but at least theres a thing to tweak and change. Anywho, give it a shot if you’re interested.
